SELECT STORY.

LOVE AND BURGLARS.

HOW MOLLIE'S MATCHMAKING PROVED A SUCCESS AFTER ALL.

A dainty parlor, with numerous easy chairs—a glowing fire in the nickel-trimmed heater—a pretty little woman listening for the foot-steps of the lord and husband. This charming picture of domestic bliss Jack Ackerman fully appreciated as he stepped into the room a few minutes later.

"Well, Mollie, what's the news?"

"Oh, nothing, only supper has been waiting half an hour. Come, let us hurry and eat; I want to talk to you."

"I thought there was something on your mind. Didn't know but I was going to get a lecture for being late."

"You deserve one, for this is the last evening I shall spend with you for two whole weeks" Mrs. John Ackerman tried to frown, but failed completely. In another half hour they were back in the parlor, Mollie began:

"I think Tom is a fine fellow, and there were never two brothers more alike than you and he."

"Thank you, my dear; I honor your judgement."

"And, John, I have the most brilliant plan concerning him."

"Do tell!" said John, with a movement toward his coat pocket, where the evening paper lay in uncut solitude. Mollie observed the motion, and promptly informed him that he should not read a word until she was through talking.

"I am going to-morrow, and then you may read the paper from the time you enter the house until midnight, with no one to bother you," she said.

Somehow, the vision of the little parlor, without Mollie's lively chatter, did not seem to strike him favorably. Perhaps this was why he tossed the paper to the other side of the room, and promised to listen. Mollie perched herself on one arm of his chair, and began:

"You know my sister Amy is coming home with me for a long visit, and don't you think it would be splendid if she and Tom would fall in love with each other? They could get married and set up housekeeping in a cottage like this one across the street. It would make me so happy, Jack!"

John laughed long and heartily.

"Match making, by Jove!" he said, at last. "Miserable yourself, and want everybody else to be; is that it, Mollie?"

"Don't laugh, John, for I am in earnest. I know they will like each other, and I have set my heart on the match. Just think how nice it would be to have Amy here; and Tom is such a darling!"

John was laughing again by this time, and it took considerable management to reduce him to order.

"I tell you what it is, Mollie, you don't want me to say a word of this to Tom or Amy, or they will take a dislike to each other."

"I know it," replied Mollie. "When I told Tom I was going to visit Aunt Hetty, I did not mention Amy's name, and I don't think he knew of her existence; as for Amy, I have been with her so little since I was married that I am sure I never spoke to her of Tom."

"Well, see that you don't do so now, for you couldn't mention his name without praising him to the skies, and she would see through your plans at once."

Mollie left the next morning, leaving directions enough to distract a man if he tried to remember half of them.

"Don't have Tom at the house when we return. Amy will be tired with her journey, and I want her to have a chance to beautify a little before she meets him."

When they reached the depot, Mollie's courage began to fail.

"I am almost sorry to go, John," she said. "Suppose something should happen to you while I am away?"

"Nonsense, darling! Go and have a good time, and be sure to be back in two weeks, and bring Amy with you."

Mollie's heart was so thoroughly in her pet plan that she found it very hard to refrain from all mention of her adorable brother-in-law during the two weeks that followed. Once she did refer to the cosy party of four they would make, and then was obliged to turn it off on Jennie, the little maid-of-all-work, as making the fourth.

The day before Mollie was to return Aunt Hetty fell ill. Amy was obliged to postpone her visit for a few days at least. Mollie could go on as she had intended, and she would follow as soon as Aunt Hetty could spare her.

"Amy will certainly come up next week," she assured John; "but I could not wait another day."

It was pleasant to be at home once more, and mistress of all she surveyed. A note from Amy, saying she would come on the following Saturday, set her mind completely at rest. She was really sorry to hear John say one morning:

"I think we had better take that run down to Camden's to-day. We must go some time this month, and, of course, you won't want to go after your sister comes."

"John, you know you cannot stay away all night. I gave Jenny leave of absence until Friday, and it won't do to leave the house alone."

"I'll get Tom to come and sleep here."

"There are three keys," said she, as they left the house. "You can give one to Tom, and I will leave one with Mr. Gates, next door. The house might get on fire, and then it would be well to have a key handy, so they could get into the house and bring out the things."

"Yes," said John, sarcastically; "or I might hire a squad of policemen to watch the house day and night."

About 11 o'clock that evening Miss Amy Arden alighted from an express, and looked about the depot as if expecting some one.

"They could not have received my second postal," she concluded, after waiting nearly half an hour in the ladies' waiting room. "Well, I can very soon find their house."

A carriage very soon deposited her in front of the pretty cottage on Lake street. All was dark. Amy pulled the bell several times, without hearing a sound within. Where could Mollie and John have gone? There was a light in the next house, and Amy remembered hearing her sister speak of her kind neighbor, Mrs. Gates. Perhaps they were spending the evening with her, or at least she might know of her whereabouts. Amy ran across the small grass plot which separated the two cottages and rang the bell. Mrs. Gates soon explained matters.

"You do look a little like Mrs. Ackerman, when you laugh," she said, in conclusion, "so I suppose it's all right to let you have the key; but she wasn't looking for you until Saturday."

"Probably she did not receive my postal, which I mailed yesterday."

"Well, I'll give you the key, of course; but are you not afraid to stay alone in the house?"

"Oh, I'm not at all timid," said Amy.

"But there's a gang of burglars about the city," urged Mrs. Gates. "But you are welcome to come in and sleep on our parlor sofa, if you are afraid."

"No, thank you," said Amy, "I will risk it for one night."

She let herself into the deserted house, not without some thrills of fear, it must be confessed. How quiet everything was! Oh, if Mollie were only there! She took a survey of the rooms, the kitchen last of all, where she concluded to look for something to eat. Hark, what was that? Only the silver-toned clock, striking the midnight hour.

"That woman's talk about burglars has made me nervous," she thought, continuing her search for eatables.

Hark! again! Surely that was a key turning in the lock; then a door opened and shut quietly, and there were footsteps in the hall. Amy's small stock of courage went down to zero. Instinctively she grasped the poker lying on the range near her. The next instant the door opened and shut quietly, and a great broad-shouldered man, with blackened face and hands, stepped into the room. Amy felt herself growing white with fear, but she raised her poker threateningly; for a moment they stared at each other in silence, then the man spoke:

"Who the——are you?"

Amy tried to shriek for help, but the sound died away in her throat. She was too frightened to speak or move. Presently he came toward her.

"Will you please lower the poker, or move away from the sink? I would like to come there and wash my hands," he said, looking very much inclined to laugh.

Was ever such effrontery known before? Still speechless, Amy moved to what looked to be an outside door.

"Don't glare at me in that frightful way," he went on, with a glance into her terror-stricken eyes.

Then came a hearty laugh, which reassured Amy a very little. Certainly this was a most extraordinary burglar, or else there was some ridiculous mistake. She would flee to Mrs. Gates' protection, at all events, she thought, dropping her weapon, and tugging away at the huge bolt with trembling fingers. By this time the young man had finished his ablutions, and presented quite a different appearance.

"I am Mr. Ackerman's brother," he said, politely. "He asked me to remain in his house to-night as a means of protection during his absence."

"Mr. Ackerman has no brother," contradicted Amy, stoutly.

"Are you sure of that?"

"Certainly I am. Mrs. Ackerman has just made me a visit. She would have mentioned if such a person existed."

"Can it be that you are Aunt Hetty?"

"Aunt Hetty? Indeed!"

Amy was finding courage and voice fast enough now.

"I beg your pardon," said Tom; "but Mollie told me she was going to visit her Aunt Hetty, and you said she had been visiting you; hence my mistake."

"I am Mrs. Ackerman's sister."

"Strange I never heard her speak of you! However, I am sorry I frightened you, Miss Arden, and, if you will allow me, I will explain matters. I am a bookkeeper at Bolton's hardware establishment—"

"You look more like a bootblack," interrupted Amy.

"Or a burglar," added Tom. "Well, as I was saying, I am a bookkeeper, but there was a press of work in the foundry to-night, and, as they happened to be short of hands, I offered to stay and assist. This accounts for my late arrival and my blackened face and hands."

He looked very much like indulging in another hearty laugh, but restrained himself at the sight of Amy's white distressed face.

"I am afraid I was rude," she said, "but it was such a shock to me. I am very tired, and —"

Tom sprang to her side, or she would have fallen from sheer exhaustion. He helped her into the parlor and brought refreshments from Mollie's generous storeroom, and they were soon talking matters over quite calmly. It was after 2 o'clock when Tom proposed to go and ask Mrs. Gates to come over for the rest of the night, but Amy protested against this, saying she was not afraid if he would remain in the house.

Mollie was almost beside herself when she came home and found how affairs had gone in her absence. Crying one minute over Amy's fright and laughing the next over Tom's graphic description of the same, it was some time before they settled down into anything like quiet.

As the days and weeks went by Mollie could not determine whether certain plans of hers were to prosper or not. Tom spent all his evenings with them, but he and Amy were always on the contrary sides of every question, and they tantalized each other so unmercifully that poor Mollie sometimes despaired of their being friends, not to mention a nearer relation.

They were all together, as usual, one evening, and Tom, for the hundredth time, was describing Amy's appearance on that memorable evening when she so nearly brained him for a burglar.

"And little did I suspect then," he went on, soberly, "she would ever have the privilege of brandishing the poker over me for life."

"What do you mean?" cried Mollie, staring first at Tom's solemn visage and then at Amy's flushed cheeks.

"Just what I said. Amy and I are going to set up housekeeping in the opposite cottage, where I suppose she will continue to flourish all sorts of murderous weapons at me."

"John, dear, it's coming about exactly as we planned," shouted Mollie, springing up in excitement.

Well, it did come about just as Mollie desired. Mrs. Amy even made cardinal the predominating color in her parlor, and it harmonizes charmingly with the dark beauty of its mistress. The sisters are inseparable, and as happy as two mortals can ever expect to be. Tom is something more than book-keeper now, in the Bolton hardware business, and he and John are talking of buying two handsome properties in the suburbs of the city. Mrs. Mollie declares, she would rather remain in the little house on Lake street, but what woman was ever proof against a handsome establishment in an aristocratic neighborhood? Not our ambitious little Mollie, I am sure.

To remove oil spots from matting, etc., wet the spot with alcohol, rub the wet spot with hard soap, then wash with cold water.

To take ink spots out of mahogany, a touch with a feather dipped in a teaspoonful of water to which a few drops of nitre have been added, and rub quickly with a wet cloth.

To prevent the juice of pies soaking into the under crust, beat the white of an egg, and brush the crust with it. To give a rich brown to the upper crust brush that with it also.

To take the shine off old silk, use spirits of ammonia or alcohol diluted with water, and apply with a sponge. To renovate old black silk, use the same and press on the wrong side.

A little saleratus rubbed on with the finger or a bit of linen, will remove stains from cups and other articles of tableware. It will also remove spots from marbleized oilcloths, and many stains from tinware.

A large picture ring screwed into the top of the handle, is the nicest thing made by which to hang up a broom. A strong screw, with a small head, should be placed in the wall at a proper height to receive it.

Stale bread may be made as nice as when fresh baked by dipping the loaf into clean, cold water and warming in a bake-oven. Much bread that is now thrown away might be saved if this was more generally practiced.

An easy and effectual plan to keep tinware from rusting consists in rubbing the new vessel inside and out with fresh lard or butter; then placing in the oven and keeping hot for several hours. The heat must not be so great as to melt the solder; still it is essential that the tin be kept very warm.

Sometimes after beating the yolks of eggs as usual, the cook is annoyed to find that they are not smooth and light yellow, but are "stringy" and have little lumps; if for custard, they spoil its good looks; but by straining through a very fine wire sieve, this trouble will be obviated, and only a very little of the egg is wasted—not so much, in fact, as if she tries to take it out with a fork or spoon.

A glue which will resist the action of water is made by boiling one pound of glue in two parts skimmed milk. To make a strong glue for inlaying and veneering: Take the best light brown glue, free from clouds or streaks; dissolve this in water, and to every pint add one-half gill of the best vinegar and one-half ounce of isinglass. For fire and waterproof glue: Mix a handful of quicklime with four ounces of linseed oil, thoroughly lixivate the mixture, boil it to a good thickness and spread it on tin plates in the shade. It will become very hard, but can be dissolved over a fire, like common glue, and is then fit for use.

An ordinary kitchen table can, with little trouble, be transformed into quite an elegant piece of furniture for the library. The top and legs are smoothly covered with green cloth; the seam on the legs to be neatly sewed and the joining made on the inside of the leg that it may not show. It is then tacked to the top to hold it in place. The cloth is drawn smoothly over the top and tacked all round the sides. The head piece extending round the sides of the table must also be covered. An under shelf is made of pine wood covered with cloth and fitted securely to the legs about eight inches below the top. A heavy cord fringe of green worsted must be fastened round the edge of the top, also round the shelf with brass headed nails about an inch and a half apart. A caster fitted into each leg will finish a very handsome table.

A New Type-Setting Machine.

A Hartford (Conn.) letter to the Springfield (Mass.) Republican contains this: A specimen of a type-setting machine is now substantially complete in a private room at Colt's. It has yet to stand the test of manufacture and actual trial, but as it now stands it is a marvel of complicated mechanism. Judged from the description, the machines used by the London Times are not as good. According to a recent account, the Times machine destroys three or four columns of type a day and will not distribute, so that it has been found necessary to have new type cast daily and brought to the machine in tubes. Now every one who has seen the Colt machine work admits that its work in setting type and distributing is faultless. By an ingenious arrangement it distributes while it sets, and the work of distribution being slightly more rapid than the setting the cases are always full. The distributor is regulated in such a way that the instant the most frequent used letter case (say that of e) is filled the work of distribution stops, to be resumed as soon as the case begins to be emptied. If the machine will do the work of two men in setting type (and much better than that is claimed for it,) it can really be said to do the work of four, since the tedious work of distribution is disposed of at the same time as a sort of side issue, and each letter goes into its appropriate case as certainly and regularly as a Yale key fits its own lock. The only doubts about the machine are as to the "justifier," but this is claimed to be complete.

Mr. J. Marsh, of Toronto, Ont., writes: "Billiousness and dyspepsia seem to have grown up with me; having been a sufferer for many years, I have tried many remedies, but with no lasting result until I used your Burdock Blood Bitters. They have been truly a blessing to me, and I cannot speak too highly of them."

Penn's First Voyage to America.

One can picture the scene to one's self, that day in early autumn, when the good ship Welcome, 300 tons burden, Robert Greenaway, master, lay at Deal with two consorts, waiting for its cargo of one hundred human beings, with all their hopes and fears, expectations and doubts. What a bustle! What a running hither and thither! What a clattering of pots and pans and household utensils, all blended in hubbub of noises of crying children, squealing swine, lowing cattle, bleating sheep, crowing cocks, and shouting of petticoated sailors stowing away the promiscuous cargo of the voyagers! We can imagine the loungers gathered about, gaping at the people who were about to sail away across the ocean, that boundless, mysterious stretch of immensity, wondering what manner of land it was toward which they were turning their faces.

And now at length the last long, sorrowful leave takings come; friend parts from friend, brother from brother, parent from child, each from the other, whom they knew in all likelihood they were never to see again this side of the grave. In many a one the warm stream of underlying human nature must have burst forth even through that stony crust of self repression that years of stern Quaker discipline had built around the heart. The ship, the sky and the ocean must have blurred together to many an eye that watched the vessel slowly moving with the tide and wind down the broad Dover channel, until it faded away into the haze of the distance, glimmered for a space and was gone.

One hundred emigrants entered that good ship Welcome at the town of Deal; only seventy left it at Upland. All alone on the empty ocean, where no aid could be had, and no escape was possible, the small-pox, that awful plague of old times, appeared among the crowded mass of terror-stricken people. One day after another those who escaped gathered on the decks, stood for a time, while some noted preacher among them spake a few simple words; then followed the plunge that told them that one more of their number was left behind as they sailed away to the westward.

Little is known of the horrors of that awful voyage. One of the emigrants speaks, with a simplicity that characterizes all that the Quakers wrote, concerning the care and solicitude of the governor for their welfare. He says: The good conversation of William Penn was very advantageous to all the company. His singular care was manifested in contributing to the necessities of many who were sick with small-pox on board, of which more than thirty died. During the passage we had many good meetings on board."

At last, however, on the 24th of October, the Welcome rounded the capes of Delaware bay, and, sailed with even and gentle winds up the broad and beautiful waterway that must have gladdened the eyes of the man to whom it virtually belonged. Three days later the storm-beaten ship rounded to, dropped her anchor, and lay at rest in front of the town of New Castle.—Harper's Magazine.

THE COLUMBIAN.

C. R. Elwell,
J. K. Bittenbender, } Editors.

BLOOMSBURG, PA.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 1882.

The lower house of the next Congress will have a democratic majority of 70.

Jay Hubbell, the collector of "voluntary assessments," got left. The Stalwarts will have to find another chairman.

The clerks and government employees from whom Hubbell collected nearly half a million of dollars, want to know what was done with the money. They propose to have an investigation.

Bossism is dead. The Democratic party has been placed in power because it professed to be opposed to bosses, and political assessments and the like. The day that the people find out that this is only a sham in order to get in power, will be a cold day for any party. There must be no bosses, whether it be in the United States, in Pennsylvania, or in Columbia county. From this time forth men who seek office must obtain their nomination from the people, and not from any one or two or half a dozen men who may have a slate of their own. "Down with the Bosses," be they Democratic or Republican, must be the watchword henceforth. Columbia county is not entirely free from bossism, and any indication of it hereafter will be met with opposition from the press and the ballot.

The people of this county will expect their representatives in the legislature to vote and act for every measure of reform that is presented at the next session. Among these is the abolishment of a large number of supernumeraries about the capital at Harrisburg, whose only duties are to draw their pay. The Democratic party cannot afford to keep up the brigade of pasters and folders that have been employed under republican administration, just to make place for party workers. Another needed reform is the abolishment of the Legislative Record, an utterly useless publication that nobody reads, and that has cost the state thousands of dollars. In the selection of a speaker great care should be taken to avoid the blunders of the last democratic house. Another man like Patterson, who was the laughing stock of the whole state, would take from us any advantage that we have gained in the late election, and ensure defeat two years hence. Pattison in the executive chair must not be counterbalanced by a Patterson as speaker. Reform is demanded by the people everywhere, and the party that gives it to them, is the great party of the future.

The Philadelphia Times thus speaks of the election of Ben Butler as Governor of Massachusetts:

The General was quite willing to serve his country as the candidate of Republicanism, but when the virtuous Republicans of the Hub protested against such a humiliation Butler made up his mind to be Governor without them, and nothing could well be smarter than the course he has pursued. He danced to the Temperance organs and leaders, piped to the Greenbackers, caught all the isms of Boston in his lap, and, being the natural hero of that crowd, he pointed out to the Democrats how they might make him Governor by calling on the Temperance men and Greenbackers to help them.

It was a daring, deep and shrewd game, but Butler has played it well and won. His methods are not to be commended. But after all they are methods of wit and foresight rather than of rascality, and compared with the ways of Boss Republicans it must be conceded that Butler has no reason to be ashamed. And if he makes as good a Governor as he has been a wide-awake candidate, Massachusetts will be governed better than she has been for a good many years.

Simon Cameron's Opinion of it.

The elder Cameron is evidently in a bad humor at the sound thrashing his son Don received at the polls last week. He is reported to have said "the Republican party has made a mistake. It's mistake was in ever listening to the propositions of the rebels, who wanted to break the party up. They should have been ignored and treated as the common enemy. Their motive was personal advancement and it was themselves and not the party they wanted to build up. The campaign should have been more aggressive, more uncompromising, letting scoulers go their way if they wanted to, without parley. There was no occasion for explanations and the party should not have been placed upon the defensive. This was the mistake. The Republican party can never afford to compromise with traitors."

The Latest as to Pattison's Plurality.

Official returns from sixty one counties in the state give a total vote of 675,421 for governor an increase of 125,908 over the vote for state treasurer in the same counties one year ago. With two remote counties to be heard from Senator Stewart's total vote is 47,876, against 49,789 for Wolfe in 1881. The following table gives the pluralities for Pattison and Beaver:

The return judges for this Senatorial district met at Danville on Tuesday the 14th inst. W. W. Hart's majorities are as follows:

Lycoming county,	4510
Montour county,	1723
Columbia county,	3958
Sullivan county,	779
	10,970

Webster, the Greenback candidate, received 837 votes in Lycoming, none in Montour, 203 in Columbia, 149 in Sullivan, making a total of 1184 in the district.

The Independent Vote.

The vote cast for the Independent Republican ticket is full fifty per cent. less than was confidently expected by those most intelligently informed on the subject. It will probably not exceed the vote received by Wolfe last year, when the Independent movement had no organization and the battle fell almost entirely upon Wolfe, without speakers or organs. This year, many of the best intellects of the Republican party were enlisted in the cause, and its organization was extended to every county, but the return exhibits no material increase of votes.

It is evident from a careful analysis of the returns that the entire Democratic Wolfe vote fell back to Pattison this year, thus taking from ten to fifteen thousand away. Next it is plain that not less than twenty thousand Independents voted directly for Pattison, thus giving him full half of his majority; and it is probable, judging from the falling off of the vote, that quite twenty-five thousand Independents, who would have voted for Stewart had they voted at all, compromised between honest conviction and party claims by staying at home on election day. The estimate of the Independent vote at a full hundred thousand is, therefore, fully sustained by the examination of the result, and the defeat would have been no broader or deeper had the full hundred thousand or more voted for Senator Stewart.

None will understand the strength of the Independents better than the Cameron leaders. They appreciate the fact that there are not less than one hundred thousand of the most intelligent and earnest Republicans of the State, who will never again vote to elect a machine ticket in Pennsylvania, and there is no trickery known to the spoilsmen that can disintegrate the Independents. Whether they vote for their Independent candidate, or whether they vote for a Democrat or whether they refuse to vote at all, the result must be the same—that is the certain defeat of all machine candidates in the future, and that is the lesson the Bosses must learn if they would ever again be known as factors in Pennsylvania politics. The Independents have asserted their omnipotence; they have won their battle, and there will be no future for Republicanism that does not embody their principles and honor their champions. —Philadelphia Times.

Needed Reform.

In a talk with a representative of the Times, Chairman Hensel has fully expressed the views of leading democrats all over the state. There is sound wisdom in his words, and unless the party shall act in the future as suggested by him, their lease of power will be a short lived one. He says: "it would be a clear case of false pretence if a Democratic administration and Legislature did not effect the needed reforms. Fortunately the party need have no apprehension about the administration of the men whom it has elected. The fidelity to public trust and capacity for official duties which have been displayed heretofore by Mr. Pattison will not fail him in the higher office. The Executive position demands at this juncture just the qualities he will bring to it. The breadth and thoughtfulness with which his campaign speeches have been marked have astonished as well as delighted the people. They need have no fears of failure on his part to deal broadly and courageously with every question that will arise. He has heretofore shown a discrimination in the choice of his official assistants to which may be safely left the selection of his advisers and administrative agents. To embarass him with the importunities of office-hunters will not only be a wrong to him, but to the party and the State. No man more clearly recognizes than the governor-elect that the success of his administration and the future of the Pennsylvania Democracy depend upon the freedom with which he is allowed to pick his councillors of State and distribute his patronage—since that offensive term must be invoked to fitly describe it—regardless of the 'shrieks of locality,' of the 'claims of 'party workers,' or even the considerations of personal friendship."

"It can do a great deal by the judicious exercise of the art of not doing it. I mean that its members must avoid the disreputable practices and stamp out the vicious abuses which so long prevailed at Harrisburg to the shame of the State, to the disgrace of the participants and finally to the overthrow of the party responsible for them. The first caucus held should be to determine not who shall fill the offices appended to the Legislature, but how many of them can be abolished. The entire pasting and folding department, now a roosting place for bummers, a hospital for decaying political loafers, should be cleaned out. It now affords a 'job' for a score or more of fellows who draw an average of $900 per session, none of whom earn the half of it and many of whom never go to Harrisburg except to sign the pay-roll. All sinecures should be remorselessly wiped out: all unnecessary clerkships and other positions abolished, the salaries reduced to a fair compensation and the pernicious system of voting them 'incidentals' and 'contingents' to cover a multitude of steals should be abandoned. The Independents and Democrats can together organize the senate in such a way as to get rid of the Cochrans, the Delaneys and the Gallaghers and other rats who have been fattening at the public cheese, and in the House the Democrats should organize so as not to admit to place anybody to whom attaches malodorous memories. The people will forgive a little honest inexperience, but they will not condone theelevation to places of trust of tainted men or of those who will abuse power. If the members of the Legislature-elect will reject free railroad passes and confine their traveling expenses to their mileage money the sessions will be shorter, and instead of meeting on Tuesday evening and adjourning Friday afternoon, they will earn their $10 a day with six day's service in the week.

"The now useless and expensive Legislative Record should be abolished or its publication reduced to a simple journal of the session. Reform is necessary in the public printing, where there is now lavish waste. In the supply of stationery and every other class of articles used in the departments and Legislature there have been gross favoritism in awarding the contracts, expert knavery in preparing the bids, fraud in the execution of the orders and spoliation of the State treasury in buying personal perquisites for officials. The supplies of soap, buckets, brushes, brooms, &c., can be cut down 75 per cent. The senatorial barber shop, maintained at the public expense, might properly be abated; at least there is no occasion to contract for Senatorial shaving-mugs at $44.50 a dozen during years when there is no session of the Senate. These are the proper subjects for party agitation from now until January 1st, and the first duty of the first Democratic caucus will be to wrestle with them. We have overthrown the 'spoils system.' Any resurrection of it by our party will be deservedly the death of the Democracy."

"I would like to see a quiet, modest inauguration, without any fuss or fandangoes and at not a dollar of expense to the State. I believe fifty thousand Democrats would go to Harrisburg to see and applaud such a send off as that would be.

"The future organization of the party in this State will be determined by the new State committee, meeting at Harrisburg on the third Monday of January. It will elect a chairman, permanent secretary and executive committee of seven. I am very emphatically of the opinion that the organization should be kept out of the hands of the office-holders and office-hunters. The strength of the committee of one hundred is largely due to this determination on its part. The tendency of office-holders to organize and run the machine for their own protection and the practice of associating persons in party management so as to afterwards claim a division of the spoils for services rendered has led to the prevailing popular protest against the 'boss system.' We must rise above that. No man should be identified with the control of the Democratic organization who holds office or who could be reasonably suspected of running the machine for his own present or future interest. The executive committee should be made up at least of a majority of men who will give their constant presence and aid to the chairman in State campaigns, taking the place of the usual so-called secretaries. In the campaign just closed Mr. Kisner, Mr. Meek and Mr. Shadle did substantially all of the work, except that which was purely clerical, which I had done, not only privately, but far more expeditiously and economically at Lancaster, under the capable direction of Mr. Lichty, than it could have been done at headquarters. Such aids as these would be of much more service to the new chairman in an executive committee than eminent counselors who would darken counsel by words and who would be busy setting up jobs for their own aggrandizement.

"The Democratic State committee leaves Philadelphia with every financial obligation paid and a little nest-egg in the treasury—a very little one, of course. Pennsylvania received no help from outside, except a single inconsiderable contribution made on personal grounds. We paid all of our bills as soon as presented, and every county that asked for aid demonstrated a legitimate necessity for it was furnished with it. I do not know of a penny spent for any illegitimate purpose.

WANAMAKER'S

Visitors to Philadelphia are invited to visit the store, whether to see or to buy. Your parcels are checked; a waiting-room is provided, where you may rest with ladies and children; guides conduct you through the house, or you wander at will; there are many things of interest to see, and a welcome.

For two years, perhaps, we have had the richest, largest, most varied and most exhaustive collection of dress-goods in Philadelphia. Before that, we may have had the largest, and even the most exhaustive, but perhaps not the richest. The slowest trade to come to a new merchant is the trade of luxury. It is the slowest to change from one to another. But it does change.

We may say our dress-goods of all sorts are at about their highest now.

Silks of all sorts have come; and never were silks more acceptable. And these words have a meaning here beyond any they could have elsewhere: because of the greater variety of wants that look to us for supply. We must have all accepted styles, and all the approved qualities of those styles; and, as to colors, can you think of one that we can do without?

A store that has only one class of trade can get along with comparatively few silks. Which stock would you rather buy out of?

Two damask towels at 15 and 18 cents may serve to show what we gain by buying of the makers. The very same towels are in the wholesale trade in New York at about 21 and 22 cents, which means at least 25 cents at retail.

We are not going to say that all our retail prices are below New York wholesale; no ling of the sort. "More than one swallow to make a summer." But where such towels are to be got for 15 cents is a good place to look for bed and table-linen, and all the other linens. That's what we mean exactly: it's true, too.

Did you remember a 35-cent flannel for 25 cents, of which we had 18,000 yards last fall? Afterward we got 7,000 yards more of it; and a little of it is left yet. That is 25-inch. This wide flannel is fully as good as that.

All the warmer sorts of underwear are ready; for men, women and children; thick-cotton, merino, wool, and silk. All the sorts needed for all sorts of people with all sorts of notions; and for people who want it, there is quite a little wit about underwear to be picked up at the counter. Where else would you look for it? Not in books surely; for goods are changing all the time; and so get ahead of books.

On Saturday night William Metz and James Green, the latter a colored man, got into an altercation on the street, and Metz drew a knife and cut Green's throat. If the knife had been sharper the jugular vein would has been severed. Green was out on Monday. No arrest has yet been made, and Green does not want to prosecute because they were both drunk. This would be a proper case for the officers of the law to take hold of, without consulting Green's wishes, as we understand there were other witnesses to the assault. Men who do not hesitate to make a murderous attack, drunk or sober, ought to be taught a lesson before they kill somebody whom the community might miss. This would scarcely apply to Green however.

A SURPRISE PARTY.

On Friday evening of last week about thirty of the young people of Centre gathered at the house of Mr. J. S. Hagenbuch for the purpose of giving his daughter, Allie, a surprise party. The surprise was complete, as Mr. Hagenbuch and those who were assisting him in the preparation of Sour Krout for the coming winter, will testify. The party was a success in that all were well treated and everybody enjoyed a pleasant time. Parties of this or some other approved kind should be encouraged in every community. It is necessary that young people should form the acquaintance of their neighbors and cultivate a social feeling throughout every neighborhood. If the parents and older persons will but exert their influence to make these young folk's parties interesting and profitable they will never rue the time spent for that cause.

The Hidlay church is being repainted outside and inside. The cemetery fence also received an additional coat, adding very much to the appearance and value of the same.

Owing to the failure of the Furniture Co. to place the desks in three of the houses, our schools did not get an even start, but all have been in operation this week.

Elisha Hagenbuch has finished his new house and now lives in grand style. Always glad to see enterprise among the farmers. Who will make the next move?

A. C. Hidlay who took charge of the blacksmith shop, near the church, last spring, has proven a careful, attentive and good mechanic and deserves the patronage of the neighborhood.

The Hidlay Brothers have left us to teach school this winter. We wish the boys success in this their first attempt.

Election returns fail to arouse our Democrats to the extent one might expect· yet since quite a number "bolted" the ticket, we suppose they feel a little sore after taking time to consider the matter and have concluded to keep mum

REPORTER.

Hymeneal.

The marriage of Miss Alice McDowell of Lightstreet to Mr. Joseph Gann of Williamsport, on Tuesday November 9th, was one of the most delightful occasions of the season. The marriage ceremony was performed in the M. E. Church, where at 6 o'clock p. m., about three hundred persons were assembled to witness the marriage of the happy pair. Promptly at that hour the organ pealed forth the beautiful wedding march, from Mendelsohn, and H. B. Clark of Bloomsburg and J. J. Metzger of Williamsport, ushered the way to future happinessd, followe by James Harrinton and Will McDowell, brother of the bride. The following ladies acted as bridesmaids: Miss Belle Vanderslice of Philadelphia, Miss Elida Thomas of Williamsport, Miss Laura Barton of Lime Ridge; they were handsomely attired in rich brocade satin dresses. The groomsmen were: Messrs. Harry Wilcox of Philadelphia, A. R. Miller and Henry Muir of Williamsport; they too were tastefully attired in the conventional suit of black. Murder at Renovo.

The following account of a murder at Renovo, Clinton county, is given by a correspondent of the Clinton Democrat in its last issue:

"What was probably the most dastardly murder ever committed in this section of the State was the killing of Thomas Miller, a yeung Englishman, by Gustave Pipher, a Prussian, on the flat west of School House Run, a short distance above Renovo, on Saturday evening shortly after eight o'clock. It appears that Miller and Pipher, who were miners employed by the Renovo Coal Company, and residing at the mines, were returning from Renovo with their families when a dispute took place between them on account of the careless shooting of a revolver by Pipher, whereupon the latter shot Miller in the left breast, the ball penetrating both lungs, and causing death to ensue almost immediately. The murderer fled at once and was met by a fellow-workman, named Saint, near the Drury's Run bridge, a short distance west of the scene of the tragedy, with whom he exchanged hats, and inquired the nearest route to Canada, saying that he had shot Miller and intended to leave the country. He demanded and received of Saint three dollars which he said he saw him have and then went up along the railroad track with the intention of taking Saint's advice to go to Canada by way of Emporium. Upon news of the murder being received here Justice Smith empannelled a coroner's jury, which viewed the body but adjourned until Sunday to procure additional evidence. The body was then brought to Peck's undertaking rooms in Renovo, where a post mortem examination was made by Dr. W. C. Weymouth.

The murderer then started in a westerly direction, but evidently did so to mislead search, as after descriptions were telegraphed in both directions, he was discovered in a freight car of an eastward bound train. He was invited by the trainmen to go to the caboose to warm himself, which he unsuspectingly did. The conductor telegraphed to Williamsport to have an officer in readiness to arrest him upon the arrival of the train. As soon as the train reached Rocktown, south of Williamsport, he was placed in custody, and taken to Williamsport jail, where he remained until the arrival of officer Beerwiler from Renovo on Day Express, Monday. He was brought to Renovo on Day Express the same evening, and had a preliminary hearing before Justice Smith, who remanded him to the Lock Haven jail to await the action of the Court.

Real Estate!

In pursuance of an order issued out of the Orphans' Court of Columbia county the undersigned administrator of Joseph Snyder, late of the town of Bloomsburg, deceased,

Green Food for Poultry.

The time is approaching when every breeder should see that his fowls are provided with green food for winter use. On a moment's reflection one can see it is necessary to insure health and prolificacy. Fowls, as well as other animals, require a certain amount of coarse and refuse matter to keep them free from constipation, indigestion and other kindred complaints. The prudent and careful poulterer will take "time by the forelock" and before winter sets in will store away cabbage, turnips, rowen, onions and potatoes for his fowls. Cabbage, in ordinary years, is undoubtedly the very best and cheapest green food that can be had. It is not necessary or economical to purchase prime heads for this use, as the soft heads which are not marketable are just as good and they cost one-half less. The same with turnips and potatoes. They can be had cheap by purchasing from farmers the small or refuse part of the crop. These articles can be stored in a dry cellar, and will be found very useful during the four or five months of winter, when the fowls require good artificial feeding in variety to make them lay at all during the frigid term or to incite them to commence their work early in the spring. The lawn mowings and clover heads can be saved and stored away in coffee sacks in a dry, cool place, until needed for use, and by steaming or cooking the vegetables with meal or potatoes there is no waste, and during cold weather is a grand need that must not be lost sight of if the breeder would like to do his stock justice and see them thrive and lay well in early spring, when their eggs are most valuable for securing early broods.—Poultry Monthly.

The Cow that Beats the World.

Last winter mention was made in the Messenger of the "Jersey Queen of Barnet," owned by J. S. Kennerson of Barnet, and of her butter record. She has made 746 pounds for the year ending March 15, 1881. She was at that time exceeded only by one cow, "Eurotus," owned by Col. A. B. Darling of the Fifth avenue hotel, New York, and that by about 30 pounds. Succeeding this trial, Mr. Kenerson determined on making another, with the intention, if possible, of beating the record of Eurotas and placing the Jersey Queen at the head of the list of butter producers in the United States, if not in the world. The trial was commenced May 20, 1881, and lasted one year.

Last winter Col. Darling purchased the cow, paying for her $2,000, but the trial was to be continued on and completed in Barnet. It has been concluded, and we have the monthly record of milk and butter for the year. It aggregates 12,854 pounds of milk and 851 pounds of butter, leaving out the fractions. She has exceeded her former record by 105 pounds, and that of Eurotas by 73 pounds.

It took a trifle over 15 pounds of milk for one of butter, which showed great richness for so large a quantity. The average of milk per day for the year would be 35¼ pounds, and of butter, nearly 2½ pounds. The cow last winter weighed 1,075 pounds, was healthy and robust looking, and was having the following daily rations: Two quarts of wheat shorts, three quarts of ground oats and three pints of corn meal twice a day, or 13 pints in all. Besides, she had a peck of carrots per day, in their season, and of course the best quality of hay to be had. For the drain that must be made on the animal system in the production of so large an amount of milk and butter, the quantity of feed does not appear as at all excessive, and it was not designed to spoil the cow in the attempt to beat the world.—St. Albans (Vt.) Messenger.

Household Hints.

If you dip your broom in clean, hot suds once a week, then shake it till it is almost dry, and then hang it up, or stand it with the handle down, it will last twice as long as it would without this operation.

Green bell peppers make a delicate relish if eaten with salt. Cut the peppers in narrow strips, after removing the seeds and rinsing in cold water; dip the strips in salt, as you do celery. Serve on a plate or in a shallow glass.

Coffee grounds make a highly successful filling for a pin cushion. They must be dried perfectly before using. Put them in a bag and hang before the kitchen stove till you have enough that are dry to fill the cushion. They do not gather moisture and consequently do not rust the needle.

Vegetables do not ordinarily form as large a part of the ordinary subsistence of an American family as they should. Whether cooked alone or jointly with the cheaper pieces of meat in a form of a stew or hash, they will always serve as a substantial means of nutrition, and tend to diminish the cost of household consumption.

A prudent and economical housewife will make a soup of bits of cold meat and the broken bones of a fowl, flavored with an onion, a carrot and a bunch of parsley, that will prove more savory than a soup of twice the cost, made by a careless hand. From the toughest parts of a fat and well flavored piece of beef or mutton she will compound stews and potted dishes that will make the eater forget there are choicer bits to be had on any other terms.

How Screws Are Made.

The process of making a screw is very interesting. The rough, large wire in big coils is, by drawing through a hole smaller than itself, made the size needed. Then it goes into a machine that at one moment cuts it a proper length, and makes a head on it. Then it is put into sawdust and "rattled" and thus brightened. Then the head is shaved down smoothly to the proper size and the nick put in at the same time. After "rattling" again in sawdust, the thread is cut by another machine, and after another "rattling," and thorough drying, the screws are assorted by hand(the fingers of those who do this move almost litterally like lighting), grossed by weight, and packed for shipping. That which renders it possible for machines to do all this is a little thing that resembles und opens and shuts like a goose's bill, which picks up a single screw at a time, and carries it where needed, holds it until grasped by something else, and returns for another. This is about the most wonderful piece of automatic skill and usefulness I have ever seen, and it has done its distinctive work at the rate of thirty-one screws a minute, although this rate is only experimental as yet; ninety-three gross per day, however, has been the work of one machine.

Plants from Slips.

The conditions required for propigating plants by cuttings or slips are very nearly the same, as far as temperature and soil go as are found to give the best results in raising from seeds. In fact, it makes but little difference what the soil is for rooting cuttings, provided it is porous. We have experimented with nearly everything, and find there is little choice, although it is our practice to use ordinary building sand, as it is cleaner to work with than anything else, and when watered never gets muddy, as a heavier soil would do. But do not suppose for a moment that sand is indispensable to the rooting of cuttings, for if the conditions of temperature are right, and the condition of cuttings is right, they will root in almost any material in which they are placed. The temperature required is very similar to that in which seeds should be germinated. If of a hardy nature, they will do nicely in a temperature averaging sixty degrees, but if of a tender or tropical nature, then the temperature should not average less than seventy five degrees. For example, you can very easily root cuttings of Geraniums, Roses, Verbenas, Petunias, Carnations, and others of what are known as "greenhouse plants," in a temperature averaging sixty degrees; but if we attempt to root Coleus, Bouvardias, Begonias, and other plants whose nature is tropical, at that temperature, they will be almost certain to fail, and success can only be complete at a temperature ranging from seventy to eighty degrees. Much depends on the condition of the cutting. Some dozen years ago I introduced what is known as the snapping condition of the cutting. That is, when the shoot of a Verbena, Geranium, Fuchsia, Begonia, Stevia, or plants of that character, is bent, if it breaks or snaps clean off, then it is in the proper condition for rooting; if it bends, it is not. Not that the bent cutting would not root, but it would take longer to root, and would make a feebler plant when it did root, than one that had the proper conditions for the forming of roots.—N. Y. Observer.

Why suffer from a state of ill health? Why be troubled with dyspepsia? Brown's Iron Bitters will cure you.

Lime as a Preservative of Wood.

It is said that experiments are being made in France to test the value of lime as a preservative of wood. Planks are piled in a tank and covered with a layer of quick-lime; the latter is gradually slacked with water. The time required for the lime to take effect depends on the thickness of the wood. Timber for mines becomes impregnated in about a week. The fact that led to these experiments are given as follows: Some forty years ago a schooner built of unseasoned Maine lumber was laden with lime, went ashore and bilged; afterward she was raised and is still in the service. Another was of a platform used by three successive generations of masons for mixing mortar; it was finally thrown aside and became overgrown with grass; after sixty years it was resurrected and found to be in a perfect state of preservation. Why not try this experiment ourselves? The process is simple and the material inexpensive. It might be done with fence posts by setting in the end intended to go in the ground in a hogshead or barrel and surrounding them with the lime and water. The value of the process that would make wood more durable for use in damp places would be incalculable.

"My friend," said the druggist, "you have a lame back, you say, and want a plaster to put on it. Once I could have shown a large assortment to choose from. Now I keep only a few, and sell most of BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS. Why? Because they are the best. I have Allcock's, the Lopsicum and some others. They are harmless and slow. Business is business, and I gradually ceased to deal in them to any great extent."

"All right, do me up a Capcine, without any more talk for my back aches as though I had been working my passage in a baggage car."

"Here you are," said the druggist, "with the word CAPCINE cut in the middle of the plaster, proving it to be genuine."

"And here's your twenty-five cents," said the lame backed man, walking slowly away.
